IT WILL GO ON.

The Philadelphia North American says the election in Pennsylvania will go on just as if there had not been any bungling of the Ballot law. We are willing to believe that the Harrisburg administration has done as well as it was able to do, and that it is not much to boast of. A poor-spirited people might be cheated out of suffrage, but the people of Pennsylvania are not of that sort, and they will vote in November about as usual. If the people of Pennsylvania choose to get in a pet and turn over the affairs of their great state to a set of small politicians they must take the consequences of such self-indulgence.

But the election will go on. If for no other reason than because the authorities cannot afford to let it stop. The Telegraph says it will be a sad day for the responsible parties if the election fails. We should say that it would be some such sort of a day as would seem frigid even in latitude 53 north. It would be a very cold day, indeed. But the election will go on. If there are doubts about getting the ballots printed, all that is necessary is to offer the job to any of our big printing establishments and the doubt will disappear. It will require as many forms as there are counties; but that does not matter except to persons who know nothing about printing. The real printers are simply smiling over the perturbations of people who know nothing about the facilities in a modern printing office. There are not six counties in Pennsylvania that cannot set up and print all the ballots needed within forty-eight hours after the copy is put in hand. It is not impossible that some of the puppy politicians at Harrisburg and elsewhere have thought that they could carry Pennsylvania for Cleveland by a small trick, but it is not probable that Governor Pattison and his colleagues have engaged in that species of felony. There has been bungling somewhere, probably in the law at first, and at official headquarters afterward, but it will take a bigger bungler than even that to steal Pennsylvania.

IGNORANCE.

As an example of the rubbish so often published in metropolitan journals on coal mining topics we quote the following paragraph from an article by Prof. G. Fred Wright, in a recent number of the New York Nation. "A few days' systematic driving through the anthracite region of Eastern Pennsylvania gives one a vivid and oppressive sense of the reckless waste with which the present generation is using up the reserve stores of coal that have so long awaited the advent of man in this desolate region. The river is black with heaps of dust, unsightly heaps of coal waste vie with the mountains themselves in magnitude all over the area, while preparations are in progress on every hand to increase the output of the mines already opened, and to open others whence the greatest product can be obtained, with least expense. If anything can be more desolate than a deserted coal village, it is a coal village that is not deserted, where everything is black with dirt, where the children of tender years seem to revel in it, and where children of larger growth join their mothers in spending the long hours of the day in picking over the waste heaps and carrying the saved lumps of coal to the nearest merchant to barter for the necessities of life. Much as one is shocked by the labor of women and children in connection with the coal mines of Belgium, he will be even more so in some places in Pennsylvania. The philosophical problems forced upon one's attention by the waste of coal in Eastern Pennsylvania are staggering whether he try to reconcile it with the benevolence of the Creator, or whether he attempts to prescribe a proper course of human conduct with respect to it."

If the Professor will only write one or two more articles on coal topics, and still further confirm the density of his ignorance of the subject, he will prove himself eligible to a position on the editorial force of the New York World.—Colliery Engineer.

LIZZIE BORDEN'S CASE

The Published Stories Cause Feeling in Her Favor.

MORSE WILL SEEK LEGAL REDRESS.

Statements Regarding Quarrels, etc. Indignantly Denied by Miss Emma Borden, Attorney Jennings and Mr. Morse.—Fall That the Prosecution is Weakened. FALL RIVER, Mass., Oct. 11.—The Borden murder case is again the sole topic of conversation. The story published yesterday has influenced feeling in favor of the girl, and it is felt that the government case has been injured. Attorney Jennings, Miss Emma and Mr. Morse emphatically deny all statements regarding quarrels, etc. Mr. Morse is intensely angry and will seek legal redress. Bridget Sullivan and Detective Seaver spent some time together yesterday looking into the minor details. The appraisal of the Borden estate has been completed, but no figures will be given out until the report is submitted to the Probate Court.

District Attorney Knowlton is in New Bedford. Regarding the publication, he expressed the opinion that the case would not be hurt thereby. Mr. Jennings made the following statement to a reporter: "The matter published in a Boston paper relating to the murders of Andrew J. Borden and his wife is a tissue of lies."

"I have endeavored to find out about Mr. and Mrs. Fred Chase at the number indicated—182 Fourth street, Fall River. There is not only no such number, but not any within 40 of it. There is no such name as George F. Sisson in the directory, nor can I find any person who knows anybody by that name."

"The kernel of the whole malicious story deals with a condition which is absolutely disproved by things found in the cellar by the prosecution and admitted to be what Miss Lizzie claimed they were. Subsequent events have confirmed her claim."

Morse says that the whole story is absolutely false, not a word of truth in it. The Boston story has already been denied by Miss Emma and Miss Lizzie, and was admitted, by Mrs. Borgan to be false to at least six persons.

A member of the police force says that the names used in the story indicated are fictitious, but the matter is substantially true. The following are two of the stories referred to. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Chase, of Fall River, and Mrs. Abigail Manchester, their daughter, were friends of the elder Borden, and visited them on the evening previous to the murder.

They overheard, it is stated, a quarrel between Lizzie and her father. "You can make your own choice and do it to-night. Either let us know what his name is or take the door on Saturday, and when you go fishing, fish for some other place to live, as I will never listen to you again. I will know the name of the man you took you into trouble."

Lizzie is said to have replied: "If I marry this man will you be satisfied that everything will be kept from the outside world?" Then the visitors were announced and conversed with Mr. and Mrs. Borden on the subject of the funeral. Mr. Borden said: "I would rather see her dead than have it come out."

Mr. George J. Sisson of Fall River is said to have heard Lizzie say to Bridget Sullivan, the hired girl: "Why don't you say how much money you want to keep quiet?" Bridget's answer was: "I don't know what you mean, but you are not the girl I took you to be."

Mr. George Sisson, it is said, will swear that less than a month before the murder Mr. Borden told him he had made a will giving Emma and Lizzie $25,000 each, which was more than he would have allowed them but for his wife's intervention.

Bridget Sullivan will, it is claimed, corroborate the story of the quarrel of Mr. Borden and Lizzie; also that she heard the night before the murders Morse and Lizzie talking about a will; also that on the afternoon of the day of the murder, Lizzie whispered to her, "Keep your tongue still, and don't talk to the officers and you can have all the money you want."
